The place where the accident occurred is around a curve, at what is known as the Kaolin works siding. The engineer was unable to see the obstacle until almost upon it. The engine bounder into the air and lit off the track about 25 feet farther on. It dashed on, tearing upcross-ties and scattering the rails for several hundred feet, and landed on one sidof the road bed. The train broke loose and landed 200 feet farther on, thus saving the cars from telescoping. Railroad men say it is a miracle that many persons were not killed. Fifteen persons were injured.

THE SAD ROMANCE OF A YOUNG SHIF'S SCRGEON AND BIS DEVOTED SWEET BLART. The remains of Seth Eastman, the young surgeon who was married to the firi of his choice on his death-bed Monday, were taken Wednesday from New York, to the houne of his parents, Concord. N. H., by his father and widowed bride. The latter, before the marriage, was Jeannette Grace Dalziel. The story of the meeting of herself and husband of a day and their countabip was very romantic.

Eastman had been a ship's surgeon, and met Miss Dalziel about two years ago on one of the vessels of the Netherlands steamship line. They became friends. When, on the surgeon's second voyage to Amsterdam he was taken with a hemorrhage, Miss Dalziel, who happened to be near, nursed him until three months later, when he apparently recovered. Then, in company with his sinter, he took a trip to the Barbadoes. He remained there a short time and again obtained a berth as ship's surgeon.

The recent Buffalo, N. Y., international fair was not a financial success, it seems its expenses exceeded the receipts by $27,000. The awards at the Bay State Fair, in all the stock classes and on the dairy tables, were made on numbers, the judges knowing nothing of ownership. Each animal was led into the show ring, bearing the number upon its halter of the premium for which it was competing. That premium, numbered in the schedule, was awarded among the animals present bearing that number, and aclerk made the record. This was all the judges knew of their work. They were not President.

"Show-yard dairying" is the name given the London Agricultural Gazatte "Show-yard dairying" is the name given by the London Agricultural Gasette to exhibitions of dairy work at agricultural fairs; and this kind of work, following in a measure the example of English shows, was introduced and carried on at the Bay State fair. In connection with the exhibition of dairy products, a working dairy was in operation each day during the entire week. A large platform was raised some three feet above the floor level, and on this, and plainly in view of the interested visitors, the working apparatus was arranged. The whole was in charge of Prof. Cheesman, now manager of Deerfoot Farm. Power for driving the churns, and heat for tempering the cream were supplied by a Shipman (kerosene) engine, an interesting if not important feature in itself. Centrifugal cream separators, cream vats for ripening the cream, churns, workers, stamps, ladies, scales, and all other modern appliances for carrying on the best known dairy work, and including the celebrated Butter Extractor, were on the platform. Seats were arranged in an open square in front, where a large audience could be

While the work was going on, the time was filled by short lectures and addresses by speakers from different parts of New England, identified with the business and accepted as dairy authorities. Jos. S. Weils, who started the first butter factory operated in New England, spoke on "How creamery butter is made." Hon. Edward Burnett, who was the first in this country to put a centrifugal separator into operation, spoke on "Feeding and care of dairy stock." Hon. Wm. R. Sessions, Secretary of the Massachusetts Board of Agriculture, had "Agricultural oducation" for his subject. Z. A. Gilbert of this State, spoke upon "Dairy Education." E. L. Bes, Secretary Vermont Dairymen's Association, gave a short address, the subject of which was mot announced. These talks were highly instructive, and were listaned

The crop bulletin of the Massachusetts board of agriculture gives the crop of cranberries of the present year as about three fourths of an average. Market reports set it down as a third short of last year's crop. Growers generally expect better prices than last year, and many are holding their bergins for a rise.

Where individual animals are unknown to the judges, favoritism is impossible. However much the stalls were placarded, as of course it is desirable they should be, it gave no knowledge to the judges, for their examinations were in the show ring exclusively. We invite attention to the merits of this plan by our fair managers.
